

WINTER FASHIONS FOR MEN.

Some New Departures in Tailoring, Ties and Headgear.

Here Are a Few Hints on What Is Thoroughly "Swagger."

Deluded individuals who imagine that fashion in the matter of male attire is of very slight consequence, and that changes in styles, if they ever change at all, occur not often than once in a dozen years or so, need only to have a quarter of an hour's chat with some well-tailored of the town to be convinced of their error.

THE PRINCE OF THE TOWN.

It is strictly well-dressed nowadays to study the man of fashion to the utmost care and attention to detail. Unless he avails himself of the most reliable information and the best professional advice on the subject he is certain to make some mortifying mistake.

The change from one season to another may be very slight—the addition of an inch or so to the length of a coat, the alleviation of a curve in the cut of a trouser leg or a button more or less on the sleeve. But every important point, and unless a man keeps fully abreast of the times in all these little matters of detail he cannot tell whether he is absolutely correct or not.

Probably a great majority of men do not pay much attention to these fine points, for they haven't the time to study them up. But those who are supposed to get the fashions understand them very well, or pretend they do, and the fashionable tailors are very willing to take up any of the crank ideas of the ultra swell, and insist that the rank and file of their customers shall follow them.

For instance, to meet the demands of the coming Fall and Winter season the man who pretends to be correctly dressed should at once invest in at least half a dozen new suits. Both the cut and style of the garments this year differ essentially in many important respects from those of last season.

The coat which will be worn for Albert round dress is the long Prince Albert coat, which became popular last year. The only difference is that this year the skirts will be longer, reaching fully 2 1/2 inches below the knee, and it will be cut fuller across the chest, making a wide double breast.

This is to be worn at weddings and afternoon receptions, and it also makes a fine coat for the street. The material is invariably Vicuña cloth or undressed pique, and only a black or a dark gray is admissible. Those who wish to avoid the extreme styles may have the coat cut an inch or two shorter, but this will not be in good form. The waistcoat to match is single-breasted and cut rather low. The coat is fitted closely about the waist, and gives the wearer the appearance of using stays, which is not regarded as objectionable.

The long-tailed cutaway is another novelty, and may be classed as semi-dress, but may have three or four, according to the figure of the wearer. The features, of course, is the tail, which approaches in its general contour and effect what is popularly known as the swallow-tail.

That is, the greater part of it is behind. It comes down to the knees, and may even trail below without violating good taste and fashion. The material is usually dark or medium gray, though fancy mixed chevrons are sometimes made up in this style with a uniform suit. This is the only style of coat with which either a silk hat or a derby may be worn. In the case of the long Prince Albert only a top hat is admissible. The long-tailed cutaway is suitable for street wear or calling in the afternoon, or the club, but it is not as swagger as the first named.

With both of these semi-dress coats it is the correct thing to wear medium gray trousers. These may be either of rough or smooth material, and are usually woven with fine stripes. Modest gentlemen will prefer these, because they do not attract too much attention to their lower extremities, but a good many fatter gentlemen are being called for. The latter are in indistinct checks and broken plaids, varying from a degree of loudness that would make the German band inaudible to comparative quietness in tone. The purchaser of the quietest coat should order three or four pairs of trousers affording agreeable contrasts to go with it if he wishes always to please the critical taste.

The sack suits are of two varieties this season, and should be worn only in the morning. The same applies to the "reefer," only the latter is more suitable for very cold or stormy weather, on account of the superior protection it affords to the chest.

The peculiarity of the sack suits this year is that they are cut longer than last year, and reach fully 2 1/2 inches below the knee. Their general appearance should suggest ease and freedom of motion. The goods of which they are made are mostly chevrons of a large variety of patterns, from bold and aggressive fan-like to neat checks, stripes and mixtures in medium and neutral colors.

The change from one season to another may be very slight—the addition of an inch or so to the length of a coat, the alleviation of a curve in the cut of a trouser leg or a button more or less on the sleeve. But every important point, and unless a man keeps fully abreast of the times in all these little matters of detail he cannot tell whether he is absolutely correct or not.

For "reefer" suits blacks, blues and gray mixtures will be in order. They may be worn with fancy trousers when the coat admits of it, that is, when it is of black or dark blue material. In this case tailors advise their patrons to purchase an extra pair of two of trousers to go with the suit. In lighter shades the suits are generally uniform.

THE BIGGEST RAT IN TOWN.

That's Ben, and He Came from Cuba, Thank You.

He Has Learned to Drink and Eat Cigarettes.

There is no hazard in saying that the most remarkable thing in the rodent line in New York can be seen at the store of the Miners' Oil and Supply Company at 12 Stone street.

BEN.

That is the address of Ben, a mammoth rat, who weighs five pounds and measures twenty-six inches from the tip of his Roman nose to the extremity of his marlinpike-shaped tail.

Ben, who is a native of Cuba and of the breed known as the mountain rat in the germ of the Antilles, was brought to this city nine months ago by Capt. Christy, of the steamer Alfred Dumois. He now lacks one month of being a year old.

Nether the McKinley bill nor the quarantine regulations regarding immigration retarded his entry, and although then as wild as the proverbial hawk he soon yielded to the civilizing influence of this metropolitan town and became tame as a lamb in the presence of a woodpile.

His education has been chiefly confined to the development of his sporting proclivities. His preceptors or trainers of the rear door into Bridge street and brought back a dog that is generally in evidence in the vicinity, and without an owner to avenge his wrongs. George Gordon seconded Ben, and Connors did the honors for the canine. The rat squatted on his haunches like a kangaroo and sparred with his forepaws for an opening. The dog made several futile rushes, each time Ben standing him off with his claws.

"He's a great jabber," said Gordon, meaning the rodent.

The canine finally got to close quarters and gave Ben a chance to show that in fighting he was right in line, to wit, he was right.

The dog yawned and broke for the door at the first sign, showing that he was yellow in heart as well as hide. Recently Pete Hartman, who keeps a saloon around on Whitehall street,

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria, When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria, When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria, When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

COMRADES. In ways that are fine de micle are Tom Connors and George Gordon. Now he drinks beer with the gusto of a child of Cherry Hill taking a surreptitious swig from the growler.

Just to convince "The Evening World" reporter and artist that Ben hankers for beer even as the colored boys long for watermelon, Tom Connors put a schooner, filled to the brim with the beverage, under the rodent's nose and gave him room to gratify his morbid appetite. In his eagerness to get down to business Ben overturned the glass. This didn't phase him, however, for he leisurely lapped up what he could off the oil-soaked floor.

His trainers and other attaches of the place where Ben leads his life of leisure say that this unique specimen of rodent quadrupeds of the genus Mus, which is the roundabout way in which scientists say "rats," also chews tobacco, and is especially fond of masticating cigarettes. They haven't been able to teach him to smoke yet. Sometimes, it is said, he absorbs too much beer, and his paw gets tangled up in a way that ought to make him long for wings.

"When he gets full he goes and lies down, just like a man," says Tom Connors.

He sleeps upon straw in a barrel and is a vegetarian. If his digestion was equal to his teeth he would dine off cobblestones or a cable-car grip. He hasn't many of them—that is, teeth—four being the sum total; but each is three-quarters of an inch in length and terminates in an edge that would shatter the down of a peach.

His chin is velvet, an orphan kitten. The latter's mother, known as Miss Whitton, was recently run over by a truck. Her last brood was taken in charge by Ben some time before her decease, and when he took a fancy, which was only to place the foster-father, it wasn't safe for Miss Whitton to show herself within a yard of her progeny.

Ben is a fighter of the champion class. When he shows himself on the streets cats inhabiting the neighborhood take to roofs. A dog can no more disturb the equilibrium of a rat than a cracker. He has dined on both.

Connors wanted to show the newspapermen that Ben was a pugilist, and so stepped out.

He education has been chiefly confined to the development of his sporting proclivities. Just to convince "The Evening World" reporter and artist that Ben hankers brought his bulldog into the place, and everybody looked for a battle royal. Ben got into fighting attitude on the instant, but Jack after inspecting his opponent, declined to tackle the rat. Ben got the worst of one encounter, however. A parrot was brought into the place for a temporary keep, and when Ben saw the bird he snatched up the parrot in his paws. The parrot was dead when Ben still regarded Ben's cold stare as an impertinence, for he reached one claw out between the bamboo bars of his boudoir and swiped Ben across the nose with an emphasis that brought both blood and a soulful squeak from the recipient.

The parrot is dead now, but Ben still regards the cage with suspicion. Since Ben has been domiciled at 12 Stone street, not another rat has been seen about the building. He has no use for his own species, nor for anything else in the four-footed kingdom, barring Pedro.

The latter goes to sleep on Ben's back, boxes his ears when in a playful mood, and generally eats more than his share of anything that happens to serve as a morsel. He is a white rat, and yet he never bites or scratches the employees of the Miners' Oil and Supply Company.
